Google Finance (beta)

Google Finance provides quick and easy access to stocks, mutual funds, and public and private company financial information. The interactive charts help you correlate stock performance with related news stories. You can read what bloggers have to say about companies, participate in discussion groups with other financial enthusiasts, learn more about company management teams— and more.

Features of Google Finance

Company Search. Google Finance lets you search for stocks, mutual funds, and public and private companies, using both company names and (where available) ticker symbols.

Interactive Charts. Google Finance charts plot market data and corresponding news stories to help determine if there is a relationship between them. In addition, you can click and drag the charts to see different time periods and zoom in for more detailed information.

News, News, and More News. Google Finance incorporates Google News, which gathers stories from more than 4,500 English-language news sources worldwide. Stories are clustered by topic so you can see different opinions on a single subject. In addition, you may select what news you want to see based on factors for importance and relevance determined by our algorithms.

Blogs. Google Finance also includes related postings from Google Blog Search.

Company Management Team. Mousing over an executive's name from most public and private companies displays his or her picture as well as links, where available, to a biography, compensation details and trading activity.

Discussion Groups. Google Finance provides access to quality Discussion Groups. We've improved our algorithms and added ratings to offer users a discussion experience that is free of irrelevant content.

Portfolios. Google Finance users can track their stock and mutual fund investments with a basic, easy-to-use portfolio.

Getting started

There are several ways to access Google Finance.

1. Go directly to <http://finance.google.com>.
2. Search for an exchange-supported ticker symbol on Google.com and click on the chart provided at the top of search results.
3. Click on the tickers on your personalized homepage or Desktop sidebar
4. Visit the “More” page on Google; click on the Google Finance link

Using the home page

The Google Finance home page includes sections such as these:

- Market Summary data for major U.S. indices
- Recent Quotes which highlights the latest quotes for the most recent stocks or funds you've viewed
- Today's Headlines for leading news stories from Google News
- Related News section which aggregates news stories relevant to the stocks you've recently seen

Using the charts

Google Finance charts are interactive and designed to help you correlate market data with related news articles. Google Finance groups news articles by topic and plots them with a flag on the chart for the company you are viewing. Clicking on the flag in the chart will highlight the corresponding group of news stories on the right hand side of the page.

The news articles displayed to the right of the Google Finance chart will continue to adjust to the time period and view you select in the charts.

There are several ways to select time period views on Google Finance charts:

1. Choose one of the pre-selected views of 1-day, 5-day, 1-month, 3-month, 6-month, 1-year from the Zoom option in the chart. The chart will adjust to show you only that time period.
2. Select your own time period by adjusting the date range window provided at the top of the chart.
3. Click and drag on the chart to go to the time period you want to see.
4. Click and drag the scroll bar at the top of the chart to the time period you want to see.

Finding the news that's important

Because Google Finance incorporates news from over 4,500 English sources, you will see articles relevant to the company or fund you are researching displayed in topical groups.
